摘要

Automation Engineer (m/f/d), Schafftenau, Tyrol, Austria

There are 300 million patients worldwide who are suffering from autoimmune diseases and who would significantly benefit from first-class autoimmune medication at low cost. As a member of the Automation Team at Novartis Austria you will be working in a world-class innovative and fully-automated manufacturing plant, supporting the manufacture of complex biological molecules in both an innovative and cost-efficient manner. As a result of your efforts, you will play a key role in delivering medications to patients and increasing access to life-saving treatments for those in greatest need.

About the Role

Main Accountabilities

Your responsibilities include, but are not limited to:

- Understanding the continuous drug substance process and how it translates into MES Syncade
- Providing technical expertise for MES Syncade software implementation and testing, including Syncade recipe authoring, webparts, interface configuration, user and audit trail management
- Performing root cause investigation and correction of errors and bugs in the MES Syncade
- Collaborating closely with local automation engineers and process experts into identifying improvements and propose solutions for MES Syncade
- Maintaining Lifecycle documents, Functional Specifications and Test Documents
- Training production and external personnel on MES Syncade
- Supporting health authority inspections, audits and periodic validation reviews

What you will bring to the role:

Essential:

- Background in IT, Engineering, Computer Science or in a related field.
 - Experience working in or with a food, drug or medical device regulated industry for at least 2 years
 - Fluency in English
 - Proven experience in MES system, ideally on Syncade, for at least 3 years
 - Knowledgeable on automation lifecycle and good automation manufacturing practices

- Ability to translate business language into automation language and vice versa
